What Council Will do

To respond to a complaint Council will require your name and contact details, an address for the location of the alleged nuisance and detailed information on the nature of the nuisance. Council will assess the nature of the complaint to decide the course of action.

When a complaint is received, Council may contact both parties to inform them of the relevant provisions of the legislation and provide information on the relevant nuisance in an attempt to resolve the issue. The complainant's identity will remain confidential in any correspondence from Council.

If the nuisance persists, it is expected that you both take some steps to resolve the issue before involving Council again. Talking with your neighbours about your concerns is the best way to resolve any recurring issues.

If further complaints are received, Council may undertake an investigation. The investigation includes consideration of the time of nuisance, how long the nuisance lasts, the environmental values of the area, the impact on the environment and the views of the complainants, the respondents and neighbours.

The responsible person can dispute the complaint, as they have the right to have the matter heard before the Court. If this occurs, the complainant will be required to supply evidence in person. A more detailed statement or affidavit may be requested, as Council must be satisfied that evidence is available to support any legal action commenced.

So talk it out with your neighbour and try to resolve the issue amicably, if you are having a problem with a noise nuisance.
